ABOUT THE SEMINAR

Aging is universal phenomena and women are more vulnerable than men due to plenty reasons. Caring for older people poses challenges to the caregivers whether it is a developed or under developed or developing country. Problems of elderly are a concern which needs to be addressed carefully and it's more in case of women due to their vulnerability. As population grow older, it is more important to the Government to design innovative policies and public services specifically targeted to older persons, focusing on Housing, Employment, Health care, Infrastructure and Social protection etc. In India, the social change is observed against the back drop of a changing social landscape marked by a nuclear oriented family structure, dual career families with no day time care provider available, and changing values evident along with the crunch of time, space and money. The drive for prosperity, modernization and westernization has come with hefty social price tag – the erosion of filial piety.
